The teaching of causal interdependence is the most important of Buddhist principles. It describes the law of nature, which exists as the natural course of things. The Buddha was no emissary of heavenly commandments, but the discoverer of this principle of the natural order, and the proclaimer of its truth to the world. Conditionality and the Two Truths - Western Buddhist Review THE PRINCIPLE OF CONDITIONALITY. It isn't easy for us to see the force of this idea, or to understand its liberating impact in the two central arenas of religious life: the fields of doctrine, on the one hand, and religious practice, on the other. The Buddha, however, was categorically clear about the centrality of this principle and,...
